- The event management industry is hardly a couple of decades old and has already experienced unprecedented growth.

Why this Unprecedented Growth?

Market leaders say that this is largely due to the fact that the Indian consumer is more than happy to shell out a few extra bucks to make a personal/professional event special, including birthday parties, product launches and weddings. Earlier what was regarded as personal occasions are now treated as grand occasions where hundreds of guests / customers are invited and extreme care is taken towards food, décor, and even celebrity appearances. This is where event management companies come into the picture.

Do you have a knack for managing events with a creative mind? Well, if yes - then you can definitely find yourself a satisfying career in the event management industry.

The Hard Work That Goes Into It...

Contrary to popular belief, the work of an event manager is more than rubbing shoulders with the elite and the famous and involves a lot of hard work. In fact, the work of an event manager begins much before an actual event and ends only after the curtains come down. Everything from coming up with brilliant ideas and executing them to perfection comes under the responsibilities of the event manager and he should be perfect at his job. Then it comes without saying that managing a large scale event is not a single man's job and requires the collaborative efforts of a team that works in impeccable co-ordination to produce extraordinary results.

When you choose to work as an event manager, you can work in one of the following departments:

1. Business Development / Client Servicing:

If you are interested in talking to clients, then this should be the field of your choice. It is also referred to as the marketing or sales profile and involves upselling to clients and also providing satisfactory customer service. In other words, their responsibility is to make the business grow and at the same time, keep the existing clients happy.

2. Event Planning/ Conceptualization:

Once the business development team has done its job properly and fetched clients for the business, the job of the planning team begins and this is nothing but brainstorming to come up with ideas and concepts that will be appealing to the clients and cater to the requirements of the event as visualized by the client.

3. Creative Department:

Once the planning and conceptualization team has come up with an idea, the job of the creative department is to bring the concept to reality by giving shape to promotional materials and other visual elements. To be a part of the creative team, you need not just be creative but also possess the technical skills required for the job.

4. Production:

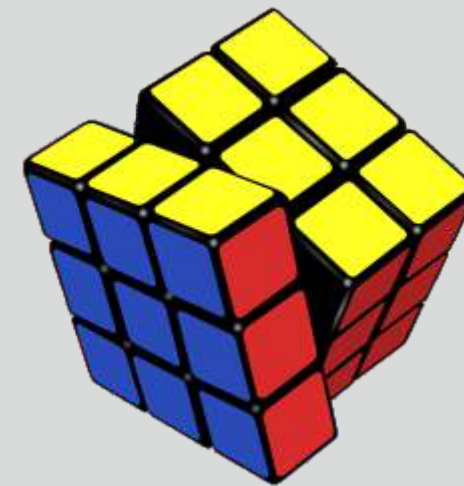

The final step in the process of event management is the production stage which is the responsibility of the event production or the operations team. The people who are a part of this team are involved in the logistics and these are the people who are responsible for ensuring that everything is in order on the day of the event and there are no glitches here and there. The key skills required are attention to detail and a sharp focus. If you are a talented event management professional, you can even work as a freelancer or set up your own event company.

Let Your Skills Do The Talking :

If you dream of making a mark in the event management industry, then you should possess the following skills:

- Exceptional organizational capabilities
- Undiluted energy
- Ability to work in a team and getting work done from people
- Ability to adjust to long working hours
- Ability to handle immense pressure
- Quick decision making abilities
- Meticulous planning abilities
- Ability to multitask

However, with the tremendous opportunities for growth in the event industry, you'll soon begin to earn anywhere close to 1.5 to 2 lakhs per month within a year or two!
