Does travel help to promote understanding and communication between countries?

Ans: Travel broadly aids to promote understanding and communication between the countries. In my view point, travel is an essential part to have better understanding between countries, so that people can increase their confidence by knowing the world in different ways. ✓

First and foremost, an individual can boost his/her knowledge by traveling, for instance when I traveled to Australia very first time, I was surprised and astonished to know about different culture and people, which certainly pumped up my understanding about globalization and how things can be different between the countries, such as, food, languages and life style, and which I found entirely different to my home county. When it comes to clothing and fashion, it is again distinct that every person has a different dressing style in different parts of the world.

Moreover, travelling is by far one of the most vital way to gain the knowledge and therefore, people love to travel between the countries to know more about things they have never seen and known before. People accept and adapt the globalization quickly. In the business and personal life, having lived abroad can give you a competitive edge. If a man goes go abroad, he embrace with others and in this way two or more nations come close and relations are improved. People can set up their businesses at international level and establish the economics of their countries. For instance, China has strong economy, because, it's people move all over the world and endorse their trade. They know very well how to treat people and attract them towards their trade. expand
