

She lay there, thinking, reflecting, and then those questions kept hitting her again and again. What had her life become? There used to be a time when she felt as though she was on top of the world. When did it all change? When did all that light from her life vanish into that strange realm of negativity? So unexplainable... so strange and different; not something she liked being used to, yet so calming and reassuring. She was in a whole new world wherein she felt the familiar hand of self hatred dawning upon her every single day. It was as if it were involuntary.

As she stared at the starless sky from the penthouse's terrace, breathing in the smoggy air, feeling the bitter taste of darkness at the back of her mouth, her thoughts kept accelerating. She could hear her heart pounding inside her. She never thought it could have ever gotten this far. She could feel the cold travelling around her; she could feel it running about inside her. This was the first time in her life. She'd never felt it to this level before. She had no clue what was going on anymore. She was too scared to try and find out. 'What if...?' she thought to herself. That wasn't an option she had ever kept open for debate. It had always been a definite and certain 'No' in her mind. She was beginning to doubt it. She was filled with doubt. What had happened to her within the past year wasn't something she could explain. It had to be felt. It had to be understood. She had begun losing hope the previous year... Bit by bit, it just vanished into oblivion. This day on the fourteenth floor she was thinking the unthinkable; crossing the borders between right and wrong... lines that she had once carved into her soul, years ago in the presence of her family.

She heard the loud crash on the ground, and felt the agonising pain. Her mind was still awake. All herself nerves were vibrating next to the beautiful grass, now covered with it's due. Someone was arriving to play hide and seek. Who was it? No one was to know until morning. Her thoughts were no longer bothering her. Nothing was anymore, as she slowly faded away into an abyss.