The world today is a noisy place. Vehicles, ships, trains and aircraft have caused an increase in the noise level around us. Whistle and/or loud sounds produced by religious, cultural, social and political activities, and even loud music, are also responsible for the increasing noise level around us. The presence of excessive noise in our surroundings is known as noise pollution. The loudness of sound is measured in decibels (dB). The loudness of different kinds of sounds in decibels observation becomes difficult.

The focus is on explaining the strong links between media and technology and media and big business. It explains how the media 'sets the agenda' through influencing our perception of issues worth devoting time and attention to, and issues that are neglected or overridden reports.

These two chapters focus on aspects of life and commercial cycles associated with markets. While some of these processes may be visible and, therefore, easily observable, there are also others that are relatively unfamiliar.

A plotter is a kind of printer for computers. Usually it is used to print on paper very large size papers. Plotters print their output by moving coloured pens across the surface of a piece of paper. They are generally used for floor printing. They can draw complex.

Akbar explained Birbal the entire procedure like this way and asked him to prepare for the journey to heaven which was to take place on the next full moon night which was only a week away.

Few days before the new moon day Birbal took some precautions. He hired a few trusted men and arranged to kill the poisonous snakes in the well, then secretly dug a tunnel from the side of the well to his house. The trusted men completed the tasks and were rewarded by Birbal.

Little Winnie was very scared of going to school. When she was four years old, her parents got her admitted in a school. It was her first day at school.

Andy and Annie had a little sweet pig, named penny. Whenever they went out to play, they took it with them.

Once there lived a little girl called Julia. She worked hard hard every day and raised a patch of pepper. One morning, when she came to tend to her patch, she saw a ram.

One day, Uncle Theodore heard two birds talking. The train is coming from the west! said one. But I think it will pass only through the desert.
